DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

1. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

2. Claims 1-16 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Bennett, U.S. Patent Publication No. US 2002/0140734 A1. Referring to claim 1, Bennett discloses a software program stored on a computer media (paragraph 107, lines 1-8) which provides a user interface for the computing device (paragraph 236, lines 1-9) comprising a display grid having rows and columns of cells (paragraph 188, lines 1-5) a number displayed in a plurality of the cells (paragraph 248, line 12) and where the numbers displayed in the cells are updated under software control and represent a common quantity which changes according to an algorithm set by a user (paragraph 183). Bennett does not disclose a handheld computer device although it does disclose combining a calculator program with the functionality of a spreadsheet (paragraph 29). At the time the invention was made, it would have been obvious to a person of ordinary skill in the art replace a handheld computer device for a calculator. One of ordinary skill in the art would have been motivated to do this because the terms are synonymous.

Referring to claim 2, Bennett discloses the software program of claim 1 further comprising a cursor operable by the user which indicates at least one currently selected cell (paragraph 191, lines 1-4).

Referring to claim 3, Bennett does not disclose where the cursor is a dashed cell outline although it does disclose that a black box or “many other techniques” may be deployed to identify the cursor (paragraph 191). At the time the invention was made, it would have been obvious to a person of ordinary skill in the art to represent the cursor with a dashed cell outline. One of ordinary skill in the art would have been motivated to do this in order to provide the user with a focus for the selected cell.

Referring to claim 4, Bennett discloses allowing the user to set at least one cell to a fixed value (paragraph 182, line 9).

Referring to claim 5, Bennett discloses allowing the user to adjust the value of a cursor selected cell up or down while the software is changing the numbers in the cells according to the algorithm (see paragraph 172 where Bennett provides for the modification of fields).

Referring to claim 6, the remarks presented above with respect to claims 3 and 4 apply equally to this claim.

Referring to claim 7, the remarks presented above with respect to claim 5 apply equally to this claim.

Referring to claim 8, Bennett does not specifically disclose where the software is programmed to provide a heat transfer lab simulation environment. However, since the heat transfer simulation is merely a mathematical calculation, it can be implemented under Bennett (see paragraph 183 which provides for mathematical calculations).

Referring to claim 10, the remarks presented above with respect to claim 2 apply equally to this claim.

Referring to claim 11, the remarks presented above with respect to claim 3 apply equally to this claim.

Referring to claim 12, the remarks presented above with respect to claim 4 apply equally to this claim.

Referring to claim 13, the remarks presented above with respect to claim 5 apply equally to this claim.

Referring to claim 14, the remarks presented above with respect to claim 6 apply equally to this claim.

Referring to claim 15, the remarks presented above with respect to claim 5 apply equally to this claim.

Referring to claim 16, the remarks presented above with respect to claim 9 apply equally to this claim.
